

Sarah Adams, MA

Sarah R. Adams has been described by clients as creative, knowledgeable, and someone who makes learning new ideas fun!

Sarah brings a wide variety of unique writing experiences to Hurley Write as an award-winning multimedia producer, reporter, and writer with a PBS/NPR television and radio station. Sarah's nearly decade of college classroom experience as a professor of media writing means she understands how challenging writing can be, even for seasoned professionals!

She's also learned to live by the mantra: practice makes progress and encourages participants in her classes to embrace this mantra.

What Makes Sarah Unique

- Because she understands how challenging writing can be, she loves spending time figuring out new ways to help others develop strategies to make the process easier and less time-consuming.
- Sarah believes that learning should be fun (a belief that she brings to life in the classroom); to that end, she develops engaging experiences that people remember long after the workshop is over.
- Sarah encourages participants to dig in and try new things, as this is what helps participants develop new and lasting strategies.
